

Weldon Faggins: GED® Success Story

While pursuing his GED®, Weldon Faggins enrolled in college. After dropping out of high school in 11th grade, he went to work at local factories and was able to make a living. Plant closings in the Farmville area forced him to enroll in GED® preparation classes at Southside Virginia Community College's Daniel Campus. After meeting with a college counselor, he put GED® classes on hold again while he attended the SVCC Truck Driver Training School. Then, he returned to the prep classes once more and in May of 2008, attained his GED® on his first attempt. A week later, he took a job driving a truck. Now, he loves his job and the fact that he accomplished his educational goals.
